Mr. Warren, with the crew of his portable saw mill, had been working at Black's for several days. When Mr. Warren went to work Wednesday morning, he seemed in good spirits and at no time complained of feeling ill. He had just assisted in turning a log preparatory to running it through the saw, when the other members of the crew saw him reel and fall. They rushed to his assistance, and although he gasped several times after they reached him, he died shortly afterward and before medical aid could be summoned. Death was pronounced due to heart failure. Mr. Warren, whose home was in Wewksville, is survived by his wife, two sons, Roy and Glenn, and two daughters, Edna and Ruth, all at home. TO HAVE CLEAN-UP WEEK A FINE WILSON EULOGY

STATE SELECTS WEEK BEGINNING APRIL 14TH.

Series of Radio Talks Will Give Suggestions—Make Your Town Better For Yourself and Your Friends.

Cleanup Week will be observed throughout the state during the week beginning April 14. Appeals are being sent to the officials of every city, borough, community and hamlet in the state by the officials of the state departments of health, forest and waters and state police to prepare for the most intensive cleanup period that Pennsylvania has ever witnessed.

The cleanup efforts this year will not be confined to the settled portions of the state. In the more remote vicinities, forest wardens, state police and health officers will direct the crusade to eliminate dirt, fire hazards and conditions that menace the public health. Especial attention will be devoted to breeding spots for flies. The avowed aims of the state wide drive are announced as health protection, fire protection and forest protection.

In setting the third week in April as the cleanup period, the state officials explain that they selected that seven day period because falls in the week that housewives throughout the state generally devote to spring housecleaning. April 1, too, has generally been regarded as moving day throughout the state. A later date is not advisable, it is explained, because the intent of the drive is to eliminate the fly breeding spots before the first spring flies deposit their eggs.

A program providing for a certain type of cleanup work on each day of the week has been formulated by the state officials in charge of the drive. Thus, Monday is proclaimed as "street and alley day" with the work of the day set forth as cleaning streets, sidewalks, gutters, ditches and sewers. Tuesday is forest day. Dead growths, underbrush and lawns are to be cleaned on that day while it is proposed to have fences repaired, whitewashing done and tree boxes straightened.

Wednesday is fly and mosquito day. Cesspools, stables, pig pens, chicken coops, stagnant pools and garbage cans are to receive the attention of the citizen cleanup army on that day. Thursday is Junk day, providing for the removal of rubbish, junk and waste. Cellars and attics are to be visited on that day.

Friday is Truck Day and it is recommended that trucks be employed then to haul away the refuse of the four days' cleanup work. Saturday is "Put In Order" Day. Everything overlooked during the preceding five days is to be finished then.

The appeal to local authorities and welfare organizations suggests that a meeting be called to outline the work of the week.

"Call a meeting and start the ball rolling," the letter reads. "Numbers of strangers motor through your town each day. They notice and remark about it; whether they remember your town, because it looked so well kept or whether they can't forget it, because it was so unsightly, depends upon you."

The cleanup drive this year is the second held under state auspices. One of the features of the program will be the broadcasting of "cleanup" talks each night during the week from Station WDAK, near Harrisburg. The week's radio program will open on Saturday, April 12, with Rev. C. Waldo Cherry, of the Pine Street Presbyterian Church, of Harrisburg, urging his invisible audience to aid in cleaning up the state. Preachers throughout the state will also be asked to appeal to their parishioners to aid in the work by means of pulpit talks on Sunday, April 13.

Oh, Those Balloon Tires!

C. W. pley, the Studebaker man, has been making thrilling demonstrations daily during the past week with his Big Six Studebaker equipped with General Balloon tires. He has been walking over sidewalks and up steps. It is all for the purpose of showing that riding with balloon tires is just like sitting among cushions. Mr. Epley will make a demonstration next Wednesday afternoon, March 12, at 3:30 by climbing the steps at the Gettysburg Academy. Dr. Chas. H. Huber has given his permission to C. W. Epley, a graduate of the Academy in 1916 and a World War veteran, and the invitation is to all.

Two Hideous Crimes Charged.

David Johnson, colored, 45, and Daniel Sterner, 72 years old, were arrested last Saturday on the charges of statutory rape and four charges of enticing minor children for immoral purposes, and are jail for trial at April Court. All the girls are under 16 years of age. Sergeant Dahlstrom, of the State Police, and Miss Margaret McMillan, as probation officer of the Court, and not as Red Cross Secretary, as has been stated, investigated the charges and secured the evidence upon which the arrests were made, evidence of which is said to be shocking.

SUPREME OF ALL WHO LIVED IN THIS GENERATION.

His Failure Declared To Be The Failure of Calvary—Glorious Forever.

William R. Pattangoll made one of the most striking eulogies at a memorial service to Woodrow Wilson at the City Hall of Augusta, Maine, and his address is being preserved in many ways.

Mr. Pattangoll said: "The high regard in which I held President Wilson while he lived, the reverence which I have for his memory, now that he has passed from earth, is difficult, if not impossible, to translate into language."

"I speak of him now as I spoke of him living. I place no flowers on his grave that I did not strew in his pathway when he trod the ways of men. I sing no praise of him now that he lies in the tomb that I did not sing both when he stood at the head of the Nation, at the height of his power, worshipped by the world, and when he lay broken and defeated in the sick room while his enemies cried his failure."

"To me he stands supreme among all of those who have lived in my generation. I can not speak of him excepting in superlatives. I can not even think of him in moderation."

"His life was a romance, impossible to have lived in any country but our own. The son of a clergyman, a quiet, thoughtful, studious youth, graduating from Princeton at 23, giving up law to study and teach history and economics, he became president of his alma mater at the age of 46. As a writer he attracted the attention of public men, and after having presided for eight years over the great university, with which his name will always be identified, he was induced to enter active politics, and in 1910 was elected Governor of New Jersey, to be called to the Presidency of the United States two years later, where he served his country and the world for eight long, weary, glorious years."

"From a clergyman's home to school, from school to law office, from law office to a teacher's chair, from from professorship to head of a university, then chief executive of the State of his adoption, then to the Presidency, and re-elected to that great office, briefly resumes his wonderful career up to the time of the World War."

His Training Not Political
"His training was not political in the ordinary use of the word. He had no legislative experience, no congressional experience, no record of party service, no intimate acquaintance with leaders, either of his own or the opposite party, when he became Governor of New Jersey, and only two years passed between his inauguration as governor and his inauguration as President."

"But he was a profound student of history and an expert economist. His trained mind, his knowledge of the experience of mankind, enabled him to approach the solution of the problems of government as a mathematician approaches the solution of problems in calculus."

"All that he lacked was an intimate knowledge of the human beings with whose aid and in spite of whose opposition he was obliged to carry out his plans."

"In his first term as President he devoted his time to domestic problems. During that period he was the means of placing in the statute books of our country laws which will remain for many years a monument to his capacity for practical statesmanship."

"Under his epoch making advance was made in sound progressive legislation not only in humanitarian and social welfare lines but in matters as well which pertained to business and finance and made for the ultimate prosperity of the Nation."

"Under him the business of the government was carried on by the chosen representatives of the people, and not by the self-selected representatives of special interests."

His Aim To Serve
"An aristocrat in intellect, his heart was filled with love of the common people, and his whole aim was to serve them, not only as a demagogue but as one who knew their needs better than they knew them themselves."

"Had the world remained at peace until his first term as President ended he might never have served his second term and might not have cared to do so; but in 1914 the mad ambition of the product of many royal intermarriages plunged Europe into the chaos of war, and he was called upon first to act as the chief spokesman of the neutral nations and later, when in spite of his every endeavor, our own country and all the world was drawn into the maelstrom, as the leader of the forces that battled for the preservation of civilization."

"Essentially a man of peace, his name is so connected with the World War that his place in history will be determined rather by his record as a great war statesman and a great war President than by his achievements as an economist, splendid as were those achievements."

"His leadership of national thought from 1914 to 1917 was a marvel of patience and tact. Certain of our people desired our entrance into the war soon after it broke out. The whole Atlantic seaboard clamored for war when the crime of the Lusitania was perpetrated. He waited, guiding the national thought by the application of the situation of inexorable logic to a just conclusion until every section of the Nation was ready to respond to the call to arms. As a result, when war was declared the whole American people approved the declaration.

"There were Tories in the time of the Revolution; the Hartford convention resolved against war and in favor of secession in 1812; draft riots marred the patriotic record of the men of 1863; but so carefully, so patiently had Woodrow Wilson counseled with the people in 1915 and 1916 that when he called for war in 1917 there was no peace party to dispute the decision."

Struck With Mighty Force

"And having once entered the war the great apostle of peace struck with the force of a thunderbolt. Under his direction the man power, the brain power, the money power, the hearts and conscience of all America were mobilized. When we entered the war the Allies were all but ready to acknowledge defeat. In 18 short months the greatest of conquering armies was humbled, the war lord of Germany had sought refuge in flight, the dream of world domination by a middle European Empire was dissipated, and the nations which had conspired together against civilization joined in unconditional surrender."

"The war ended, and he sought to build upon the wreck of the world an edifice of lasting peace. He had reached the heights. For a few brief moments the nations listened to his words of wisdom and his plans for their future safety, then those who should have stood by him and have fought the battle of humanity shouldered to shoulder with him failed him, and he who had reached the mountain to tread his sad way back to the valley. He heard then the jeers of those who had cheered him loudest when he last went their way, and he met their condemnation as he had met their praise with steady gaze and bravest smile, weary and broken in the flesh, strong and upright in the spirit."

"Men prayed for a leader and God gave him to them. For a time they followed, but as he led ever onward and ever upward, the trailing marchers tired and fell back, and the leader walked alone."

His Brother's Keeper

"A great man, philosopher, statesman, prophet, interpreter of democracy, companion for kings, he rested his faith in the multitude. He was his brother's keeper, and the burden that the weary toiler bore taxed his strength as though it were his own."

"Loved, worshipped, honored, trusted, hated, vilified, betrayed, he went his way unmoved by victory or defeat, conscious of his rectitude—sure of the verdict of history."

"Men called him cold. His heart was warm with love of all mankind. They charged him with ambition. He had no aim except the common good; no purpose save to serve his fellow men."

"He lived to sound the height and depth of life. He heard the crowd shout 'Hosanna' and heard them cry 'Crucify him.' Under the tremendous strain which he put upon his mental and physical energy his health broke down, and for months he lay stricken, unable to take part in the world's work."

The Whole World Mourned

"They turned back to him toward the last and gave him their love, their tears, their prayers in place of the cheers and the applause they had given him in the earlier days. As time went on he became nearer and dearer to them, and when the end came the whole world mourned."

"Woodrow Wilson has passed into history now. He belongs to the ages. He will take his place with those whose lives mark milestones in mankind's progress. The world is better for his having lived, and so long as the English language is spoken, so long as the memory of the Nation endures, his fame will live, and in his name men will dedicate their lives to those great ideals which were his, and for which he worked and spoke and wrote and prayed, for which he lived, and for which he suffered and died."

POLITICAL MORALITY.
Denby left the Cabinet with a friendly pat on the back. Dougherty won't resign and there is no one in authority to point the way. When Samuel J. Tilden cleaned out the Tweed ring in New York, there was no uncertainty in his stirring assault on crime masquerading in political garb, saying, "Let the people judge us by what we do to cleanse our parties, and to purify the official trusts of the country, and to elevate the standard of public morality. Principles are the test of political character. The Democracy always made fidelity to official trust and justice to the toiling masses who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow a fundamental article in the party party creed. It is time now to proclaim and to enforce the decree that whoever plunders the people, though he steal the liver of heaven to serve the devil in, is no Democrat."

New Auto License Rules.
Since last Saturday, March 1, many persons who have not received their 1924 driver's license cards, may not operate a motor vehicle in Pennsylvania.
Police were instructed to begin arrests Saturday morning of persons who drive without having a license card to show.

The fact that a driver may have a card showing he owns the car he is driving is not sufficient. In former years, a license card for the owner of the car was issued together with the license tags. By act of last Legislature, however, a separate license card is required before an owner may drive his car.

Beginning with March 1, each driver must be able to show two cards if stopped by police or members of the State Motor Patrol.

One is the card of ownership, which the owner received when he received his certificate of title for his car; this card should be carried in the car at all times it is in operation.

The second is his personal driver's license card. This card should be carried on the driver's person. Persons without either of these cards will face legal difficulties if stopped and asked for them.

Although in former years three varieties of driver's license cards were common, this year all varieties have been combined on one—merely a driver's license card. There is no distinction this year whether the driver is an owner, an unpaid or paid operator. Each kind of operator is licensed the same, and each pay $1 fee this year.

Although more than 1,530,000 drivers license cards of all kinds were issued last year by the automobile division of the State Highway Department, only 800,000 have so far applied this year. The mail is now swollen with belated applications.

BANK STATEMENTS.

How To Read And Understand Them.

Our readers frequently see in our columns statements of our banks. Charles M. McCurdy, president of the First National Bank of Bellefonte, has recently written an interesting booklet on "Bank Statements—How to Read and Understand Them," which is reproduced below. With its help any bank statement can be read clearly and understandingly and when this is done feverish fears will disappear. Mr. McCurdy is a native of Gettysburg and for years was an official in the Gettysburg National Bank and left here to become cashier of the First National Bank of Bellefonte, of which institution he is now president. The booklet he has given the public will be most useful in helping to understand banking.

BANK STATEMENTS

Four times a year National Banks are subject to a call for a statement of condition from the Comptroller of the Currency at Washington. These calls come at irregular periods and always for a date prior to the call. The law provides that a copy of each statement be published in a local newspaper so that the public may have knowledge of the bank's condition. A large proportion of the public does not understand the significance of the figures given and are unable to determine, without explanation, just what they mean—whether they show a strong institution or one that has very moderate strength and resources.

It is the purpose of this article to explain the several items that appear in the statement and to show in what the strength of a bank consists.

Of course one of the vital features in any institution is the character of its management. This should be such as to inspire confidence, for no array of figures will supply this essential requisite. But assuming that the management is capable and of high character, which, fortunately, is true of most of our banking institutions, there are yet certain features that supplement the management and add to the security of the bank's patrons, because of their importance and the large margin of safety they afford.

It will be seen that the figures of a report are grouped under two heads: Resources and Liabilities. Liabilities representing what the bank owes—Resources showing the cash, securities and other property that it owns with which to pay these debts.

A bank's creditors are usually of three, occasionally of four, classes. First—Its stockholders. Second—Its note holders. Third—Its depositors. Fourth—The institution from which it borrows money.

The stockholders are only technical creditors, for they are the bank. The noteholders, those who hold the circulating notes—that is, money—issued by the bank, need not concern themselves about its solvency for they, as will be seen, are fully protected against loss. The occasional fourth creditor is also usually protected in any loan made. But the real creditors, the depositors, have only the strength of the bank for security. It is they who are most deeply concerned in the figures presented.

Taking up the liabilities, or what the bank owes, we find the first item is Capital. This represents the amount subscribed and paid in by the several persons who organized the bank, and is held by many different owners.

The two following items, Surplus and Undivided Profits, is the sum of the earnings that have not been divided among the shareholders in the form of dividends. It reflects the real strength of the bank and should always be considered first in determining its standing. The larger the surplus the greater security afforded depositors.

The next item is Circulating Notes. All national banks are required to invest all or a part of their capital in United States bonds. These bonds are deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, who then issues to the bank circulating notes (money) to the amount of the bonds thus deposited. These bonds will be found listed among the assets and serve to retire the notes, meanwhile fully protecting the noteholders against loss. All the other items on the statement under the head of liabilities, except dividends unpaid, which is the amount declared but not yet withdrawn by the stockholders, and bills payable, which represents the amount temporarily borrowed from the Federal Reserve Bank to accommodate local borrowers, represents deposits of various kinds which are a first lien on all the bank's assets and is the amount due the many thousands of depositors which the bank serves.

What does it have in the way of cash, securities and other property with which to pay this large amount?

Looking at the statement under the head of Resources we find the first items are Loans and Discounts. This represents the amount that has been loaned to local borrowers, to farmers, merchants, and other business men. Practically all of this amount is at work in our own neighborhood, for banks buy little outside paper, and usually loans only to people it knows.

The next item, Overdrafts, shows the amount due by depositors who have, through error or otherwise, temporarily overdrawn their accounts. Properly managed banks rigidly enforce the rule prohibiting overdrafts, yet there are occasions when checks are drawn in good faith, by mistake, and when refusal to pay might work injury to the depositor. For example the holder of a certificate of deposit, not subject to check, may draw it in ignorance of the rule, or a perfectly solvent depositor may make a mistake in his own account. Under such circumstances the bank will sometimes permit the overdraft, feeling assured that it will soon be made good.

Following, we find other Bonds, Securities, etc., representing the various investments in mortgage bonds, local and otherwise held. Almost all of these securities could be immediately sold and they afford a safeguard to depositors, because being quickly convertible into cash the bank could at once meet any possible demands that might be made. The next item, Banking House, shows the amount at which the building and bank fixtures are valued.

The remaining items, omitting the last one, shows in the aggregate what the bank has on hand, in cash items, not actual cash in the vault, or on deposit subject to check with the Federal Reserve and other banks. Under the law a certain percentage of deposits must be kept with the Federal Reserve Bank. While this reserve must be maintained it could be used in emergencies, and adding it to the other figures, cash in vault and amount due from National Banks, etc., etc., we find the bank's reserve fund, all of which is immediately available. The last item, Redemption Fund with U. S. Treasurer, is 5% of the circulating notes which the bank must keep with the Treasurer of the United States as additional security for its circulating notes.

The total amount of the property described, less the amount due depositors, note holders and the Federal Reserve Bank, gives a difference between these two amounts representing the bank's capital and surplus. If we add to this sum the additional liability of the stockholders, we have the entire amount which would have to be lost by the bank before any depositor would be in danger.

But depositors may say, "The figures presented are impressive and show on the surface a strong bank, yet we know nothing of the character of the loans and investment which make up four-fifths of your assets. They may include a large amount of bad or doubtful securities." This is a proper and pertinent inquiry. Bankers are usually working so that they can affirm that a very small per cent often less than one per cent of the investments held are of doubtful nature.

As will be seen from the foregoing statement a bank's strength depends First—On its management. Second—On its surplus. Third—On the character of its investments.

Board Issues Statement.

The school board of Mt. Pleasant township has issued a statement with regard to the reported invasion of the Kilpatrick school grounds by the Ku Klux Klan about two weeks ago. It is as follows: "The land on which Kilpatrick school stands is not the property of any individual. The local school have a deed made years ago in which they and their successors can use this ground for school purposes as long as they have need for it. The flag was on display in the school when the Ku Klux meeting took place and the pole they used to erect the flag was the property of the school authorities. The school law plainly provides when the flag shall be on display and who shall superintend its erection. Those in whom the people have entrusted the school affairs of the township held the flag raising originally arranged for on Washington's Birthday and the Klan is requested to remove their property or the proper authorities will attend to the matter."

Coming Events.

Rev. Mark E. Stock, pastor of St. Francis Xavier Catholic Church, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar P. Hamilton and Joseph A. Maguire were guests at the testimonial dinner to Past State Deputy Patrick A. Kennedy of the Knights of Columbus in Harrisburg on Thursday of last week. Among the speakers were Rt. Rev. Philip R. McDevitt, State Deputy Leo G. Griffith, James A. Flaherty, Supreme Knight, and Michael J. McEnry, of Philadelphia. The latter in his remarks stated that the State Convention of the Knights of Columbus may come to Gettysburg when the memorial front to St. Francis Xavier Church is dedicated, for which the Knights of Columbus have authorized an appropriation of $25,000, and before that occasion it is expected Gettysburg will have a chapter of the Knights of Columbus instituted here.

Bank Examiner Appointed.

Robert Wilson, Jr. son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Wilson, Sr., of Littlestown, has been appointed an assistant bank examiner, under the State department of banking. He began his new duties on Monday, and for the present will be located in Harrisburg. Mr. Wilson attended Gettysburg College in 1918 during the S. A. T. C. later graduating from the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania with the class of 1922. He is a member of the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity. Since graduating from the Wharton School, Mr. Wilson has been connected with the Lee Higginson Company, investment bankers, being located in New York and Boston.

Sixty-One Years In Postal Service.

George G. Plank, of Arendtsville, assistant postmaster at that place, celebrated his 88th birthday February 23rd. Mr. Plank has been in the postal service longer than any other man in Pennsylvania, it is believed, having been connected with the Arendtsville postoffice since 1863, or 61 years. When Mr. Plank went into the postoffice at Arendtsville, mail was taken to that borough from Gettysburg once a week by a courier. Mr. Plank has been a regular contributor to The Compiler columns for many years.

IT HAS LASTED

Gettysburg People Must Believe Such Convincing Testimony As Mrs. Arendt's.

No one in Gettysburg who suffers backache, headaches, dizziness, rheumatic pains or distressing urinary ills can afford to ignore this twice-told story of a Gettysburg resident. It is confirmed testimony, telling of lasting benefit from Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys. It's evidence that no man or woman in Gettysburg can doubt.

Mrs. D. F. Arendt, R. R. St., Gettysburg, says: "I was suffering from backache and nervous headaches and my kidneys acted too freely. I felt all worn out in the morning. Doan's Pills from the People's Drug Store, gave me relief at once."

OVER FIVE YEARS LATER, Mrs. Arendt said: "I don't have kidney trouble any more and I attribute my cure to Doan's Pills. The cure they brought has been a lasting one."

Price 60c. at all dealers. Don't simply ask for kidney remedy—get Doan's Pills—the same that Mrs. Arendt had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.

To Our Subscribers

Last year we added thirty millions of dollars' worth of plant for the telephone service of Pennsylvania. We told you about this through the public press and by various other means. We want you to know our job and how we are doing it. In a public service such as this the public should have all the facts.

Many of our subscribers are asking the questions—Why all this rush? Why all these new buildings? Construction costs are high these days. Why this tremendous expansion of your switchboards and lines? Why not take it a little easier?

Fair questions! And they merit a four-square answer.

During the next few weeks we will endeavor to tell exactly what we have been doing, what we expect to do in the next four or five years—and most important of all—why we are doing it.
